The Law of Organized Nudism

Henry M. Schmerer

Follow this and additional works at: http://repository.law.miami.edu/umlr

Part of the Torts Commons

Recommended Citation

Available at: http://repository.law.miami.edu/umlr/vol17/iss4/8
THE LAW OF ORGANIZED NUDISM

HENRY M. SCHMERER*

And though you seek in garments the freedom of privacy you may find in them a harness and a chain.

And when the unclean shall be no more,
What were modesty but a fetter and a fouling of the mind?
And forget not that the earth delights to feel your bare feet
And the winds long to play with your hair.

—The Prophet by Kahlil Gibran

I. INTRODUCTION ........................................................... 596
II. THE TABOO OF NUDISM .................................................. 598
III. INDECENT EXPOSURE .................................................. 600
IV. NUDIST PUBLICATIONS .................................................. 604
V. NUDIST CAMPS .......................................................... 608
   A. Michigan ............................................................ 608
   B. New York ............................................................ 610
   C. Texas ................................................................. 612
   D. Other Jurisdictions .................................................. 613
VI. CONCLUSION ............................................................. 617

I. INTRODUCTION

Organized nudism is based on the belief that people should dispense with the wearing of clothing except when necessary to protect the body from the elements of nature.¹ There are several thousand nudists in the United States. They belong to two national organizations, operate 109 local clubs and publish five national magazines.² Nudists represent all walks of life, political views and religions.³ While most of the law govern-

* Editor-in-Chief, University of Miami Law Review; Student Assistant in Instruction for Freshmen, University of Miami School of Law.

1. Some other definitions of “nudism” are:
   Nudism appears to be a sincere if misguided theory that clothing, when climate does not require it, is deleterious to mental health by promoting an attitude of shame with regard to natural attributes and functions of the body. Model Penal Code § 207.10, comment at 34 (Tent. Draft No. 6, 1957).
   Nudism, n. the cult or practice of living in a nude state. Webster, New International Dictionary of the English Language 1672 (2d ed. 1951).
   [Nudism is a] socialized form of exhibitionism, i.e., one which lacks the erotic appeal among those who join in the practice. Mueller, Legal Regulation of Sexual Conduct 59 (1961).
   Also consider this statement which appeared in Note, 69 U.S.L. Rev. 346 (1935):
   ANYONE who, in a secluded spot, far from the world’s confusion, strife and gabble, on a day fair, mild and calm, has basked, unclad, in the sunshine for a half hour, looking up straight into the depths of the blue sky above, will feel that there is something real in “nudism.”

3. Huntington, Defense of Nudism 228 (1958). For some of the diverse groups that oppose nudists, see Comment, 41 J. Crim. L. &. C. 57 (1950).
ing organized nudism centers around the crime of indecent exposure, nudism presents some interesting problems in tort law as well as constitutional law, corporate law and family law.

Contrary to popular belief, nudists do not attend nudist camps for sexual reasons. Nor do nudists consider themselves immodest people. They "believe in the essential wholesomeness of the human body, and all its functions." Scientific tests indicate that sexual responses are affected by the situation in which the stimulus is given. Men do not show any external signs of sexual response on even their first visit to a nudist camp. Sexually provocative clothing and alcoholic beverages are prohibited in nudist camps. Individuals attend nudist camps for varying reasons, including health, physical fitness, relaxation, and communion with nature. In Europe, the emphasis is on gymnastics and bodily exercise.

Nudist camps locate in secluded places with dense growth, fences, and locked gates to keep out the public. Nearly all nudist camps have swimming pools and a few large ones have their own airfields. Volleyball is the favorite sport of nudists because it is an active sport which a large number of people can play at the same time and a playing field is easily created. The nudist camp is a family center, although some camps admit single persons on a limited basis. Nudists claim that nudism reduces the tensions that lead to divorce and juvenile delinquency. As to the latter, they say that none of the more than nineteen thousand children who have spent a measurable amount of time in a nudist camp in the past twenty-nine years had been arrested as a juvenile delinquent.

4. [N]akedness in itself has nothing to do with modesty or immodesty; it is the conditions under which the nakedness occurs which determines whether or not modesty will be roused. If none of the factors of modesty are violated, if no embarrassing self-attention is excited, if there is a consciousness of perfect propriety alike in the subject and in the spectator, nakedness is entirely compatible with the most scrupulous modesty. A. Duval, a pupil of Ingress, tells that a female model was once quietly posing, completely nude, at the Ecole des Beaux Arts. Suddenly she screamed and ran to cover herself with her garments. She had seen a workman on the roof gazing inquisitively at her through a skylight. 1 H. Ellis, Psychology of Sex 75 (3d ed. rev. 1910).
8. Literature obtained from the American Sunbathing Association, Inc., P. O. Box 38, Mays Landing, New Jersey. See generally Huntington, Defense of Nudism (1958); Donald Johnson, The Nudists (1959); Webb, Eden Regained (1957).
9. See note 8 supra.
11. See note 8 supra.
In light of this last point, it would be alarming if parents were prosecuted for contributing to the delinquency of a minor or for permitting a ward to be indecently exposed because their children attended a nudist camp.

This paper will discuss the law applicable to organized nudism. It does not encompass situations when scanty clothing or transparent clothing is worn, where the "illusion of nudeness" is given, or where exhibitionism becomes a sexual perversion. Exhibitionism is the medical term for the conduct of a person who exhibits his sexual organs to others. But it is not considered a perversion when practiced by nudists.

Unto the pure all things are pure: but unto them that are defiled and unbelieving there is nothing pure; even their mind and conscience is defiled.

II. THE Taboo OF NUDISM

Probably the only thing more embarrassing than being naked among a number of clothed people is to be clothed among a number of naked people. The naked body has been a taboo in the Judaeo-Christian world since Adam and Eve discovered their nakedness in the Garden of Eden. English-speaking people are the most completely clothed people in the world, with the taboo emphasizing the sexual organs. The taboo today primarily takes the form of an intersex taboo, prohibiting exposure between persons of the opposite sex. Some cultures emphasize a complete taboo, prohibiting exposure to oneself, or an objective taboo, prohibiting exposure to anyone else, including the same sex, or a familial taboo, prohibiting exposure to other members of the family.

This taboo is not universal. In modern Japan communal baths for both sexes are popular, and the athletes of ancient Greece performed naked. The taboo exists as long as any part of the body is covered, not for protection but for concealment. This distinguishes organized nudism from the near-nudism of athletics and the pseudo-nudism of the stage. The taboo is beginning to decline. It was not too long ago that it was thought indecent for a male physician to attend a woman during childbirth. Younger people are more likely to do activities in the nude than their elders did.

There is another aspect to the taboo—no one should look at another person's nakedness. The "Peeping Tom" or voyeur is not only punished by the law, but he could be subject to the tort action of invasion of privacy. While this action overlaps the concept that "Every man's house is his castle," the right of privacy is said to exist in its simplest form in protection against the unauthorized observance of another person's nakedness. Recovery has been permitted where a woman's

---

27. Warren, supra note 7, at 162. It is considered acceptable today for members of the same sex to perform activities together nude at the local YMCA. See KINSEY, op. cit. supra note 26, at 366-67.

28. Warren, supra note 7, at 162.

29. See Parmelee v. United States, 72 App. D.C. 203, 206 n.16, 113 F.2d 729, 732 n.16 (D.C. Cir. 1940); KINSEY, op. cit. supra note 26, at 365; Warren, supra note 7, at 160. The word "gymnasium" is derived from the Greek meaning "to exercise naked."

WEBSTER, NEW INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE 1118 (2d ed. 1951).

30. Warren, supra note 7, at 162.

33. "Voyeurism is a pathological indulgence in looking at some form of nudity as a source of gratification in place of the normal sex act." KARPMAN, THE SEXUAL OFFENDER AND HIS OFFENSES 17 (1957).

35. 1 HARPER & JAMES, TORTS § 9.5 (1956); accord, Pritchett v. Board of Comm'rs, 42 Ind. App. 3, 85 N.E. 32 (1908); State v. Perry, 224 Minn. 346, 28 N.W.2d 851 (1947) (dictum); Walsh v. Pritchard, 125 Mont. 517, 241 F.2d 816 (1952) (dictum); Moore v. New York Elevated R.R., 130 N.Y. 523, 29 N.E. 997 (1892); FLEMING, TORTS 566 (2d ed. 1961); Winfield, PRIVACY, 47 L.Q. REV. 23, 24 (1931).

36. See Warren & Brandeis, The Right to Privacy, 4 HARV. L. REV. 193 (1890). Every man's house is called his castle. Why? Because it is surrounded by a moat, or defended by a wall? No. It may be a straw-built hut; the wind may whistle around it, the rain may enter it, but the king cannot. People v. Marxhausen, 204 Mich. 559, 565, 171 N.W. 557, 558 (1919) (quoting William Pitt Chatham).

nude picture was published; a movie of a caesarean operation was distributed; an X-ray of a woman's pelvic region was published; and, when a man was introduced as a doctor's assistant, thereby observing childbirth. Dean Prosser questions whether a woman sunbathing nude in her backyard would have an action for invasion of privacy when the neighbors spied upon her, probably because she would be an "attractive nuisance."

The taboo enters the mainstream of the law under the guise of indecent exposure.

III. INDECENT EXPOSURE

Indecent exposure is the legal term for exhibitionism. It was a misdemeanor at common law in England. The crime consisted of the intentional exposure of the private parts or nakedness of a person, in a public place. It was necessary that more than one person observed the act or could have observed the act had they looked. The first reported case was decided by the King's Bench in 1660. The defendant appeared nude on a balcony in Covent Garden in front of a crowd "to the grand scandal of Christianity." The case also established that the King's Bench was the custos morum (guardian of the morals) of all the king's subjects.

The English courts took a liberal attitude in two cases involving men bathing nude at once-secluded spots. While the men were convicted for indecent exposure, suspended sentences were given. There was language in the cases to the effect that nudism was permissible in secluded areas. In 1864, the High Court of Scotland in M'Kenzie v. Whyte reversed the conviction of nude bathers since it was not shown that anyone was annoyed by their nudity. The High Court recognized the English cases as also being the law of Scotland, "but in every case criminal exposure of the person must have some reference both to the impropriety of the act and to its effect on the mind of the person to whom the exposure is made. Organized nudism was probably not a crime at common law in England.

46. Rex v. Crunden, 2 Camp. 89, 170 Eng. Rep. 1091 (K.B. 1809); Regina v. Reed, 12 Cox Crim. Cas. 1 (Home Cir. 1871).

In the United States, the prevailing view is that specific intent is not necessary; a general intent evidenced by the openness of the act is sufficient. Also, "public place" has been expanded to cover any place where there is a congregation of people. Kentucky, New York and the District of Columbia are notable exceptions to these prevailing American views.

While there have been slightly more than one hundred indecent exposure cases reported in the United States, a sizable number of them intentionally omit the facts of the case. In those cases where enough facts are given, it is obvious that indecent exposure has become a catch-

48. M'Kenzie v. Whyte, 4 Irv. 570, 573 (Scot. High Ct. 1864). The court rejected the contention that an offense had been committed against private persons or against public morals.

But is a person lawfully bathing, and undressing with a view to lawful bathing, indecently exposing his person in a criminal sense, because he may be within some short distance of an inhabited house, if such exposure is not done with any indecent purpose, or any resulting offense to decency? I should hesitate to lay down, as a general rule, that a man cannot bathe in his own river or in the sea, because there may be one dwelling-house not far off, whether a castle or a cottage, or because I may possibly be seen by one man or one woman. It is not said that these youths were there in pursuance of any unlawful purpose. Id. at 574.

49. See generally Annot., 93 A.L.R. 996 (1934); Wilson, Public Indecency, 11 Crim. L. Mag. & Rep. 461 (1889); 1 Wood, Nuisances §§ 57-63 (3d ed. 1893). Animals have also been the subject of indecent exhibitions. See Redd v. State, 7 Ga. App. 575, 67 S.E. 709 (1910) (bull and cow permitted to copulate in public); Nolin v. Mayor, 12 Tenn. 134 (1833) (exhibition of a stud horse).

E.g., Lorimer v. State, 76 Ind. 495 (1881); State v. Goldstein, 72 N.J.L. 336, 62 Atl. 1006 (Sup. Ct. 1906), aff'd, 74 N.J.L. 598, 65 Atl. 1119 (Cl. Err. & App. 1907); Moffit v. State, 43 Tex. 346 (1875).

55. The evidence contained in the record is so disgusting, filthy, indecent, and pornographic that we decline to set it forth in this opinion. Suffice it to say that it showed that the acts of the accused and the female named in the indictment were so utterly obscene, lecherous, and degrading as to constitute them a disgrace to the human race. Strong v. State, 11 S.E.2d 238, 239 (Ga. App. 1940); accord, People v. Carey, 217 Mich. 601, 187 N.W. 261 (1922).
all crime for prosecuting not only exhibitionists and nudists, but also acts of fornication, adultery, homosexuality, intent to commit rape, rape, masturbation, prostitution, miscegenation, impairing the morals of a child and soliciting others to expose themselves.

The courts have made exceptions to indecent exposure in situations of necessity or accidental exposure. But, because of the moral and religious significance attached to indecent exposure, the courts are in conflict as to negation of the crime when there was consent by the person who saw the exposure, when the prosecuting witness sought to withdraw the complaint, and when no one was actually offended by the exposure. In dicta, courts have said that a person could be convicted without anyone having seen the act; the defendant's confession corroborated by the circumstances would be sufficient. The courts have not yet

---

70. See Ardery v. State, 56 Ind. 328 (1877); 4 BLACKSTONE, COMMENTARIES 64. It has been said that an indecent exposure is “malum in se.” Truett v. State, 3 Ala. App. 114, 57 So. 512 (1912).
71. Commonwealth v. Hardin, 2 Ky. L. Rep. 59 (Cl. App. 1880) (not a crime); State v. Martin, 125 Iowa 715, 101 N.W. 637 (1904) (is a crime).
72. See People v. Ulman, 258 App. Div. 262, 16 N.Y.S.2d 222 (1939), where the conviction was reversed and the information dismissed in a three to two decision.
73. See People v. Belmonte, 26 P.R.R. 706 (1918); State v. Juneau, 88 Wis. 180, 59 N.W. 580 (1894).
recognizes that the exhibitionist needs medical treatment rather than punishment, even when the exhibitionist recognizes his sickness.\textsuperscript{75}

A person may also be prosecuted for the "offense of maintaining a common nuisance consisting of indecent exposure of the person,"\textsuperscript{76} An injunction will also lie.\textsuperscript{77} Individual recovery in tort actions will be permissible where the plaintiff can show unique injury.\textsuperscript{78} For instance, a woman could probably recover if she showed that she was "disturbed, vexed, humiliated, and . . . suffered a violation of her individual dignity by the conduct of the defendant."\textsuperscript{79} An injunction and damages were awarded a plaintiff who lived next door to a house of ill-fame because the plaintiff was "annoyed and seriously disturbed" by the noise and indecent exposures made at the windows.\textsuperscript{80} A woman who was confronted by indecent exposures by several men while waiting for a train in the defendant railroad's waiting room was unable to recover since she could not show that the defendant was aware or had reason to believe that the events would happen.\textsuperscript{81} It has also been advanced that it is an invasion of privacy to be forced to witness an indecent exposure:

A woman may resent as much a man making an indecent exposure in her presence as to discover that she is observed while getting ready for bed.\textsuperscript{82}

Almost all states and many municipalities\textsuperscript{83} have laws prohibiting indecent exposure. Many of these statutes fall under the titles of lewdness, lascivious acts, obscenity, or indecencies. Many states have a combination of these statutes.\textsuperscript{84} The statutory crimes are broader than common-law indecent exposure since they also cover other sex crimes.\textsuperscript{85} But when the prosecution is for indecent exposure there appears to be no practical difference between the statutory and the common-law offense, regardless of how a particular state statute is phrased. The common-law

\textsuperscript{77} See Weis v. Superior Court, 30 Cal. App. 730, 159 Pac. 464 (1916).

\textsuperscript{78} See Prosser, \textit{Torts} § 71 (2d ed. 1955).

\textsuperscript{80} Crawford v. Tyrrell, 128 N.Y. 341, 28 N.E. 514 (1891).

\textsuperscript{82} 1 Harper & James, \textit{Torts} § 9.6, at 681 (1956).

\textsuperscript{83} For problems that arise when both the state and a municipality have similar laws but different penalties, see Browning v. City of Tampa, 101 So.2d 365 (Fla. 1958).

\textsuperscript{84} See Mueller, \textit{Legal Regulation of Sexual Conduct} 56-59 (1961). For a table of state statutes, see \textit{id.} at 133-38.

crime and the statute may be used interchangeably.\textsuperscript{66} In a state where the prosecutor has several types of laws at his disposal, a conviction under one type of law precludes a conviction under any other law.\textsuperscript{87} However, a conviction for indecent exposure under a municipal ordinance does not preclude a conviction under a state statute.\textsuperscript{88}

A crime has \textit{not} been committed when a person is nude in his home and happens to be seen by a passerby.\textsuperscript{88a} \textit{Hearn v. District of Columbia}, \textsuperscript{88b} decided in 1962, is an extended decision on that point and should become the precedent case for that proposition.\textsuperscript{88c}

The Model Penal Code has taken a relatively progressive view:

\textit{Indecent Exposure}. A person commits a misdemeanor if for the purpose of arousing or gratifying sexual desire of himself or any person other than his spouse, he exposes his genitals under circumstances in which he knows his conduct is likely to cause affront or alarm.\textsuperscript{89}

\textit{Lewdness}. A person commits a petty misdemeanor if he does any lewd act which he knows is likely to be observed by others who would be affronted or alarmed.\textsuperscript{90}

The authors of the Code explicitly intended to exempt “cult nudism” from either section by requiring an “awareness of likelihood of affronting observers.”\textsuperscript{91}

“Obscenity,” a term that has been used to describe indecent exposure, is usually reserved for printed material.\textsuperscript{92}

\section*{IV. NUDIST PUBLICATIONS}

While there have been many cases in various parts of the country which consider whether publications and movies distributed by nudists

\textsuperscript{86.} State v. Bauguess, 106 Iowa 107, 76 N.W. 508 (1898); Messina v. State, 212 Md. 602, 130 A.2d 578 (1957); State v. Rose, 32 Mo. 560 (1862).

\textsuperscript{87.} Faulkner v. State, 146 Fla. 769, 1 So.2d 857 (1941).

\textsuperscript{88.} State v. End, 232 Minn. 266, 45 N.W.2d 378 (1950).

\textsuperscript{88c.} The \textit{Hearn} case has already been followed in Selph v. District of Columbia, 188 A.2d 344 (D.C. Ct. App. 1963).

\textsuperscript{89.} \textsc{Model Penal Code} § 213.5 (Proposed Official Draft 1962).

\textsuperscript{90.} \textit{Id.} § 251.1.

\textsuperscript{91.} \textsc{Model Penal Code} §§ 213.4, 215.1, comment (Tent. Draft No. 13, 1961).

\textsuperscript{92.} The American Digest System of Key Numbers mixes together under the topic heading “obscenity,” indecent exposure, obscene publications and exhibitions, profane language, and other public indecencies.
are obscene, several decisions by the New York and Federal courts are significant since they have laid the groundwork for upholding the practice of organized nudism. Studies on sexual responses to observing nude pictures show that the effect on the viewer is slight.\(^9\)

As early as 1884, the New York Court of Appeals, although upholding the conviction of a seller of photographs of nude female paintings which were on exhibit in the Salon in Paris, said in dictum:

> It is evident that mere nudity in painting and sculpture is not obscenity. Some of the great works in painting and sculpture, as all know, represent nude human forms. It is a false delicacy and mere prudency which would condemn and banish from sight all such objects as obscene, simply on account of their nudity.\(^9\)

In 1940, in Parmalee v. United States,\(^9\) the District of Columbia Court of Appeals broadened this concept by saying:

> It cannot be assumed that nudity is obscene per se and under all circumstances.\(^9\)

The Parmalee case reversed the Customs Department's ban on the importation of the book Nudism in Modern Life by Maurice Parmalee. The Government conceded that there was nothing obscene in the text nor in nineteen of the twenty-three photographs in the book. The four “objectionable” pictures contained full front views of male and female nudes together at a nudist camp. The pictures were in black and white and unretouched. They were \(2\frac{1}{2} \times 3\frac{3}{4}\) inches in size with the human figures being \(1\frac{1}{2}\) inches in height. The majority opinion by Judge Miller is a well-documented treatise on the point that a book about the advantages of nudism is a contribution to the study of sociology. The banning of the book was compared to discouraging the study of medicine during the Dark Ages.\(^9\) The court quoted from Havelock Ellis, a noted psychologist:

> Nakedness is always chaster in its effects than partial clothing . . . [N]othing is so chaste as nudity . . . [T]he greatest provocations of lust are from our apparel.\(^9\)

---

95. 72 App. D.C. 203, 113 F.2d 729 (D.C. Cir. 1940).

96. Id. at 206, 113 F.2d at 732.

97. A dog (in 1500) was the usual object to be dissected before the class. As the dissection progressed, the professor would read what Galen [131-201 A.D.] said on the subject. Sometimes Professor Sylvius would find something in the course of dissection of the dog which did not agree with Galen. If so, he gave his class to understand the dog was wrong. Id. at 208 n.20, 113 F.2d at 734 n.20.

98. Id. at 206 n.15, 113 F.2d 732 n.15.
Judge Miller also pointed out that the Encyclopedia Brittanica contained front views of nude males and females in contact; the pictures being larger than those in Parmalee's book and emphasizing sexual subjects as distinguished from Parmalee's book.

In 1954, the Post Office Department was enjoined by a district court from prohibiting the mailing of coasters which depicted Marilyn Monroe in the nude. The court stated:

> Modern authorities, including the Federal Courts, clearly establish the principle that nudity in itself is not obscene.

However, in 1955, the District Court for the District of Columbia refused to enjoin the Post Office Department from prohibiting the mailing of the illustrated nudist magazine Sunshine and Health. While the court recognized that "nudity is not obscene, per se," it said that nudes become obscene when the pubic areas of males or females are clearly visible. The court then proceeded to a picture-by-picture analysis, declaring which pictures were obscene and "grotesque." The court then tried to establish guidelines for the future by stating that pictures of the pubic areas of children would depend on their age, analogizing presumptions of the development of a child's pubic area to common-law criminal presumptions of a child's guilt. Also, a picture's obscenity was to be determined by the view and shading, and the distance the person was from the camera. The Court of Appeals upheld this decision, but the Supreme Court reversed in a per curiam decision, citing the precedent case on obscenity, Roth v. United States. In a later suit, *Sunshine and Health received second class postal rates privileges.\textsuperscript{107} The Model Penal Code has also adopted the view that a nude magazine is not obscene "merely because it promotes the idea and pictures happily unclad people."\textsuperscript{108}

On the authority of the Roth case, the Supreme Court also reversed the Customs Department's ban on the importation of illustrated nude books and magazines,\textsuperscript{109} even though the lower court was of the opinion that the material emphasized pictures of "shapely, well-developed young women appearing in the nude, mostly in front exposures," as opposed to pictures of "mixed groups of all ages which ordinarily would be found in a nudist park."\textsuperscript{110} However, the lower court did repeat the now oft-quoted statement: "Nudity is not per se obscene."\textsuperscript{111}

In 1957, the New York Court of Appeals, in In the Matter of Excelsior Pictures Corp. v. Regents of the Univ.,\textsuperscript{112} held in an extended opinion by Judge Desmond that the state could not prohibit the commercial showing of the movie The Garden of Eden, which depicted life in a Florida nudist camp. While Judge Desmond recognized that he was "not called upon to pass judgment on nudism or nudists," he pointed out:

Nudity in itself and without lewdness or dirtiness is not obscenity in law or in common sense.\textsuperscript{113}

The dissenting opinion contended: "Aside from the question of degree, the resulting harm is the same whether the exhibition is in person or portrayed."\textsuperscript{114} This view emphasizes that the taboo against nudity, which underlies prosecutions of nudists, is the same whether it be the actual practice of nudism or its portrayal through pictures. One wonders who the dissenting judges are protecting: Is it the audience, which is watching the movie, or is it the nudists in the movie?

In two recent cases, the courts of the District of Columbia reversed obscene matter which comes within the test: "[W]hether to the average person, applying contemporary community standards, the dominant theme of the material taken as a whole appeals to prurient interest." Roth v. United States, 354 U.S. 476, 489 (1957).
V. NUDIST CAMPS

A. Michigan

Organized nudism was introduced to the United States in 1929 from Germany. Within two years police raids against nudist groups had begun, and in 1934, the Michigan Supreme Court had the distinction of deciding the first case on organized nudism, People v. Ring.

The defendants in the Ring case were convicted of indecent exposure for being nude at a private nudist camp in the presence of married couples with their children and single men. The camp was visible from a bluff on adjacent property which was used by hunters and fishermen. The police raided the camp without a search warrant and claimed that they saw the nudists "cavorting around." A unanimous court held that constitutionally protected search and seizure does not extend to open lands and answered the following question in the affirmative:

Is one who, on his own property, privately goes without clothing, in the presence of persons whose sense of decency, propriety and morality is not offended, guilty of [making an open or indecent or obscene exposure of his person]? The court explained that:

Instinctive modesty, human decency, and natural self-respect require that the private parts of persons be customarily kept covered in the presence of others.

The court based its authority on a 1925 Michigan case which upheld the conviction of an elderly man who exposed himself to two girls, ages ten and twelve, on their way to school.

In 1958, without any substantive change in the statutory law of Michigan, the supreme court, in People v. Hildabridle, reversed the convictions of nudists in a fact situation almost identical to the Ring case. The nudist camp in Hildabridle had operated for fourteen years without complaint. The camp strictly enforced its ban on alcoholic beverages and on occasion had called the state police to enforce it. The camp could not be seen from any point off the property. In fact, it was so well-secluded that it was impossible for the raiding officers to gather evidence except by entering the property under the subterfuge of serving arrest warrants.

120. Id. at 662, 255 N.W. at 374.
121. Id. at 662, 255 N.W. at 375.

Justice Voelker (author of Anatomy of a Murder) wrote a very literary major opinion on behalf of three of the seven participating justices. A fourth justice concurred only in the majority opinion relative to the search and seizure issue. With respect to the search and seizure issue, Justice Voelker called the police "peeping Toms" and distinguished the Ring case on the basis that in Ring an open field was involved but here it was the "courtyard" of a defendant's home.

The portion of Justice Voelker's opinion dealing with organized nudism was prefaced with the remarks:

Lest I henceforth be heralded as the patron saint of nudism (which I probably will be anyway), I hasten to preface what follows by stating that I am not a disciple of the cult of nudism. Its presumed enchantments totally elude me.125

Justice Voelker then proceeded to elaborate on many of the views that nudists have always claimed:

Guilt or innocence of indecent exposure is not a matter of measuring the amount of human flesh exposed; one does not caliper the revealed epidermis and certify guilt as increasing by the square inch; the indecency of an exposure is always a matter of intent to be gathered from all of the circumstances. The plain fact is that often the less the exposure the more plainly indecent it becomes, by that very circumstance alone; the plain fact is that usually there is involved an aggressive and unmistakeably erotic attempt to focus the attention of others solely on the sexual organs of the exposor, and, as any weary patrolman knows (if some judges may have forgotten), most usually on a certain engorged portion of the male anatomy. To link these

124. If eccentricity were a crime then all of us were felons. Id. at 579, 92 N.W.2d at 13. [If nudity in itself is indecency,] the curators of our art galleries and museums would have to turn to the cultivation of fig leaves . . . . Id. at 581, 92 N.W.2d at 14. In a world locked in a death struggle between the David of democracy and the Goliath of giant totalitarianism, it serves David illy for the court of last resort . . . . to put its stamp of approval on such a dubious departure from our traditional procedures and historic safeguards against invasion of our individual rights . . . . Id. at 592-93, 92 N.W.2d at 19.

125. Id. at 578, 92 N.W.2d at 13. In addition, Justice Voelker concluded his opinion: "Our reversal of these convictions is no more an indorsement by us of nudism than our occasional necessary reversal of a murder conviction constitutes a judicial indorsement of murder." Id. at 593, 92 N.W.2d at 20.
poor defendants, however deluded, with such gross and panting immorality is a kind of back-handed indecency in itself.\textsuperscript{126}

Justice Voelker refuted the state's argument that the children who were at the camp must be protected, by saying that it was "monstrous" to think that parents were exposing their children to indecencies. If this were true, then the state should be censured for not taking more drastic action. Furthermore, anthropologists and sociologists reject the idea that children who see nakedness are given evil and erotic tendencies.\textsuperscript{127}

The \textit{Ring} case must be overruled as a "murky" opinion. It is "hereby nominated for oblivion."\textsuperscript{128} "[I am not] prepared to burn down the house of constitutional safeguards in order to roast a few nudists."\textsuperscript{129}

The three dissenters in a relatively short opinion emphasized that nudism is not protected by the freedom to assemble any more than obscenity is protected by free speech.

\textbf{B. New York}

Seven months after the nudists lost their appeal in Michigan in 1934, the New York Appellate Division reached the opposite result in a weaker fact situation.\textsuperscript{130} In \textit{People v. Burke},\textsuperscript{131} a nudist group leased a gymnasium and swimming pool in the basement of a building in downtown New York City. In celebration of "Nudism Forward Month," the public was invited to attend for a day upon paying an admission of one dollar. It was impossible to observe the activities from outside the building. Two detectives paid the admission price and, after observing men and women engaged in sports and swimming together nude, arrested them.

In a very short opinion, the majority of the court reversed the conviction on the basis that there was no indecent exposure and suggested that the next legislature pass a law to stop the practice.

Justice Merrell wrote a long dissent, discussing the "fall of Adam" and the immateriality of the nudists' motives, and saying that the activities were indecent because of the "effect it would have on a by-

\begin{itemize}
\item \textsuperscript{126} \textit{Id.} at 592, 92 N.W.2d at 19.
\item \textsuperscript{127} \textit{Id.} at 581-82, 591-92, 92 N.W.2d at 14, 19.
\item \textsuperscript{128} \textit{Id.} at 587, 92 N.W.2d at 17. "When student editors [Comment, 33 \textit{Mich. L. Rev.} 936 (1935)] start sniping at our decisions with such deadly accuracy, perhaps the time has come for all of us to take a second look at the \textit{Ring} case." \textit{Ibid.}
\item \textsuperscript{129} \textit{Id.} at 575, 92 N.W.2d at 11. "The busiest snoopers and moral vigilantes among us are doubtless convinced of 3 things: of their own unaltering rectitude; that what they do is always for our own best good; and that any among us who dare question the legality of their activities are soaked in sin." \textit{Id.} at 593, 92 N.W.2d at 20.
\item \textsuperscript{130} Usually nudist activities take place in the open air and sunshine. But in the \textit{Burke} case it took place in a basement gymnasium. The \textit{Burke} situation has been referred to as "cellar nudism." Note, 69 \textit{U.S.L. Rev.} 346 (1935).
\end{itemize}
stander, whom the indecency statutes of our state are designed to protect . . . . However, Justice Merrell did not explain how a bystander was injured, since the only persons who could see the nudists were those persons present in the gymnasium who chose to be there. Justice Merrell concluded:

It cannot be doubted that the parading of persons, male and female, naked, in public places, would raise thoughts of lasciviousness and lust in many who observed such practices. I do not think this country has yet reached the stage when such practices should be permitted.\(^{183}\)

The state legislature agreed with Justice Merrell and the suggestion of the majority. Before the New York Court of Appeals affirmed the decision without opinion, two judges dissenting,\(^{184}\) the legislature adopted the following statute:

A person who in any place wilfully exposes his private parts in the presence of two or more persons of the opposite sex whose private parts are similarly exposed . . . is guilty of a misdemeanor.\(^{185}\)

Critics of this law point to the following situations: if one man was naked in the presence of ten naked women, only the man would have committed a crime; the nudists in the Burke case could still perform their activities if every half hour a different sex put on scanty underwear;\(^{193}\) and, a crime would be committed if a woman gave birth to twin boys.\(^{187}\) But even the critics conceded that a "statute such as New York's adequately and unquestionably prohibits nudism."\(^{1138}\)

There have been no prosecutions under the New York statute. However, in 1957, one of the reasons given by the state censorship board for denying a license to the movie Garden of Eden was that the showing of a movie depicting organized nudism was prohibited by that statute. In In the Matter of Excelsior Pictures v. Regents of the Univ.,\(^{189}\) Judge Desmond in reversing the censorship board used the opportunity to "interpret" the statute.

Judge Desmond said the statute should be narrowly and strictly construed since it created a crime unknown to the common law. The assumption that the legislature made criminal "any practice of nudism, \(^{132}\) Id. at 92, 276 N.Y. Supp. at 411.

\(^{133}\) Id. at 92, 276 N.Y. Supp. at 412.
\(^{134}\) People v. Burke, 267 N.Y. 571, 196 N.E. 585 (1935).
\(^{135}\) N.Y. Pen. Law § 1140-b.
\(^{137}\) Comment, 41 J. Crim. L. & C. 57, 60 n.33 (1950).
\(^{138}\) Id. at 61.
\(^{139}\) 3 N.Y.2d 237, 144 N.E.2d 31 (1957).
even in secluded private grounds and by family groups" was false.\textsuperscript{140} While Judge Desmond recognized that the contemporary press had referred to the legislation as the "anti-nudism bill," he pointed out that Governor Lehman wrote in his memorandum approving the bill that it was directed against "the professional exploitation of nudism for profit."\textsuperscript{141} Thus, the majority view in the \textit{Excelsior} case was that the statute was limited to the facts of the \textit{Burke} case.

The three dissenting judges were furious:

The history of this legislation makes it crystal clear that the exhibition of male and female nudes totally exposed to each other offends the community sense of decency.\textsuperscript{142} The exhibition of "Garden of Eden" would be a "professional exploitation of nudism for profit" and a "widespread use of exhibitionism for financial gain" . . . \textsuperscript{143}

C. \textit{Texas}

The fourth and latest case to decide if nudism and indecent exposure were synonymous was \textit{Campbell v. State},\textsuperscript{144} decided in 1960 by the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals. The defendant was convicted under the following statute:

If any person shall make, publish or print any indecent and obscene print, picture or written composition manifestly designed to corrupt the morals of youth, or shall designedly make any obscene and indecent exhibition of his own or the person of another in public, he shall be fined not exceeding one hundred dollars.\textsuperscript{145}

It should be noted that the statute was coupled with a prohibition against obscene pictures and was similar to common-law indecent exposure except there was no minimum-number-of-observers requirement.

The defendant operated a nudist camp on a wooded tract of land he owned several miles from the nearest city. Fifty-four families belonged to the camp, paying an annual fee of forty-two dollars a year. Police officers observed ten or fifteen nude men, women and children at the nudist camp for two or three hours from a point off the defendant's property. There appeared to be no one else who saw or complained of the nudist camp. The police were aware of the camp because the defendant had told the local sheriff about it. In a short opinion the court affirmed the conviction, saying:

\textit{We do not construe the statute as authorizing anyone to invite} a number of people to his home and then exhibit himself to them in the nude with impunity. It is the persons who can and do see the exhibition rather than the place where the exhibition is made which controls under the statute. These people were not members of his family and were therefore members of "the public." To hold otherwise would sanction any violation of the law so long as those who participated were members of a club to which they paid a fee to join.\textsuperscript{140}

The \textit{Campbell} decision made no reference to prior cases on nudism. The only cases cited were two nineteenth century Texas cases. One case discussed the meaning of a "public" place without giving any facts.\textsuperscript{147} The other case gave a definition of indecent exposure to distinguish that act from the act of putting indecent marks upon the clothes worn by another person.\textsuperscript{148} \textit{Campbell} was the first case in which review was sought in the United States Supreme Court, but certiorari was denied.\textsuperscript{149}

The \textit{Campbell} case is diametrically opposed to \textit{People v. Burke}\textsuperscript{150} and \textit{People v. Hildabridle}.\textsuperscript{151} In \textit{Campbell}, the court frowned upon admission being paid on a yearly basis. In \textit{Burke}, the court was not disturbed by the payment of one dollar for the day. In \textit{Campbell}, it was immaterial that the nudist camp was defendant's home. In \textit{Hildabridle}, a nudist camp was held to be as much a "castle" as one's home, with all the incidents of privacy attaching. It should be noted that the New York and Michigan statutes considered in those cases can be considered more applicable to nudism since they were not diluted with other crimes within the same code sections and they were not limited by the words "in public."\textsuperscript{152} Of course, the \textit{Campbell} case is similar in philosophy to \textit{People v. Ring}.\textsuperscript{153} The only factual distinction that could be made to reconcile the results of the four cases is that in \textit{Ring} and \textit{Campbell}, which held against the nudists, the nudist activities \textit{could be seen} from vantage points off the nudists' property; while in \textit{Burke} and \textit{Hildabridle}, which held for the nudists, the nudist activities \textit{could not} be seen without entering the nudists' property. Thus, the rule is evolved: What the non-nudist cannot see cannot disturb him.

D. Other Jurisdictions

Several states have passed laws to prohibit or regulate organized nudism. Where there have been cases interpreting these laws, they have involved fact situations other than the practice of nudism.

\textsuperscript{147} Moffit v. State, 43 Tex. 346 (1875).
\textsuperscript{148} Tucker v. State, 28 Tex. App. 541, 13 S.W. 1004 (1890).
\textsuperscript{151} 353 Mich. 562, 92 N.W.2d 6 (1958).
\textsuperscript{152} \textit{Mich. Comp. Laws} § 750.335a (Supp. 1956); \textit{N.Y. Pen. Law} § 1140.
\textsuperscript{153} 267 Mich. 657, 255 N.W. 373 (1934).
Ohio has a code section entitled "Nudism prohibited." But the language within the section does not mention the word nudism:

Whoever being eighteen years of age or over, willfully exposes his or her private parts in the presence of two or more persons of the opposite sex . . . shall be fined not more than two hundred dollars or imprisoned not more than six months, or both.\(^{154}\)

The statute provides exceptions for medical purposes and family members.

On the basis of that statute, the Ohio Supreme Court in State ex rel. Church v. Brown,\(^ {155}\) refused to issue a mandamus to require the Secretary of State to incorporate the National Nudist Council as a nonprofit corporation. The Council's articles of incorporation listed as its purposes the promotion of nudism, the education of the public about the subject, and the establishment of private facilities where nudism could be practiced. The court justified the denial of incorporation on the basis that at least part of the activities the Council planned were prohibited by statute. By adopting the general hornbook rule regarding corporations whose purpose was to violate the law,\(^ {156}\) the court was able to avoid going to the merits of the statute. The United States Supreme Court dismissed the appeal for want of a substantial federal question\(^ {157}\) even though the Council alleged violations of the religion, speech, press, and assembly freedoms in the state court.

The Ohio Court of Appeals in State v. Rothschild\(^ {158}\) held that the nudism statute was not applicable to a conviction for exhibiting the nudist movie Garden of Eden as teaching or advocating the violation of a criminal law. The court pointed out that the movie did not advocate violating the law, although it did imply that the law should be repealed. The latter purpose could not be a reason for conviction: "Legal and social progress are dependent upon our freedom to consider whether an existing law is wise or desirable."\(^ {159}\)

The Ohio nudism statute also has been used to prosecute a situation that normally is classified as indecent exposure.\(^ {160}\) However, a conviction under the statute is not a misdemeanor involving moral turpitude.\(^ {161}\)

Florida and California have become havens for nudist camps because

---

\(^{154}\) Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 2905.31 (Baldwin 1958).
\(^{155}\) 165 Ohio St. 31, 133 N.E.2d 333, appeal dismissed, 352 U.S. 884 (1956).
\(^{159}\) Id. at 104, 163 N.E.2d at 910.
of their warm, sunny climates and favorable laws. Florida's indecent exposure statute exempts from its operation a naked person "in any place provided or set apart for that purpose." The Florida Supreme Court has twice prevented the legislature from prohibiting and regulating nudist camps in specific counties on the grounds that the Florida Constitution prohibits "local" laws. The legislature tried to avoid the constitutional provision by making the statutes applicable to all counties that fit the population figures stated in the act. But the court could not see how the legislature's concern for the morals of the people regarding nudist camps could change when a county's population increased or decreased a few thousand people. In one of the acts, there was a section that made the prohibition of nudist camps applicable to the entire state, but this was also held unconstitutional since the general provision was not reflected in the title of the act.

California's indecent exposure statute is only applicable to private places "where there are present other persons to be offended or annoyed thereby . . . ." Only one case concerning a nudist camp has appeared in California. The owner of neighboring property sued a nudist camp for overburdening the nudist camp's easement to use a road across the plaintiff's property. The plaintiff's contention was that the easement was originally granted when the defendant used his land exclusively as a farm and home; now as many as five hundred cars a week used the road. The case was decided for the plaintiff, as if nudism was not involved, except for one sentence: "The easement for access to a tranquil home and farm was converted into a turbulent route to reach a hilarious nudist colony."

Kentucky regulates "nudist societies" to a degree that their establishment in that state is not likely. A nudist is defined as:

any person who displays any part of his private person naked before persons of the opposite sex, not his husband or wife, at their solicitation or with their consent, for religious or health purposes.

An annual tax of one thousand dollars must be paid to own or operate a nudist society. A "wall twenty feet in height, made of brick, stone

163. State ex rel. Cotterill v. Bessenger, 133 So.2d 409 (Fla. 1961) (counties having a population of 36,700 to 38,000); Ex parte Porter, 141 Fla. 711, 193 So. 750 (1940) (counties having a population of 155,000 to 165,000).
164. Ex parte Porter, 141 Fla. 711, 193 So. 750 (1940).
167. Id. at 850, 195 P.2d at 828.
or cement” must surround the premises. The attorney-general shall inspect the premises whenever he may deem it necessary. And the names and addresses of all persons who enter the society must be kept open for inspection. The last requirement goes against the nudists’ policy of not disclosing names of members and introducing people by first names only in order to avoid public harassment of a known nudist.

Arkansas passed a series of emergency laws in 1957, making it a crime not only to practice nudism, but also to “advocate, demonstrate or promote nudism.” The latter part of the prohibition might be violative of the speech and press freedoms, especially in light of the language found in the Ohio case of State v. Rothschild. Nudism is defined as:

the act or acts of a person or persons congregating or gathering with his, her, or their private parts exposed in the presence of one or more persons of the opposite sex as a form of social practice.

Excepted from the definition is medical treatment and “when the persons are married legally one to another.” The legislature also made nudist camps a public nuisance and provided for their abatement.

North Carolina’s indecent exposure statute applies to:

Any person who in any place willfully exposes his person, or private parts thereof, in the presence of one or more persons of the opposite sex whose person, or the private parts thereof, are similarly exposed . . .

This statute is worded so narrowly that it could be interpreted not only against nudists, but also against a husband and wife disrobing before each other. North Carolina did not make indecent exposure in a public place a statutory crime until 1941, after the type of exposure quoted hereabove had been part of the code.

Georgia makes indecent bathing on Sunday a misdemeanor if done “in view of a road or passway leading to or from a house of religious worship . . .”

180. See 19 N.C.L. Rev. 479 (1941).
Nudist camps are also controlled through local zoning and licensing regulations.\textsuperscript{188} In addition, a property owner in the neighborhood of a nudist camp could possibly enjoin or recover damages from the nudist camp as a private nuisance. Mental depression from knowing that a nudist camp is present could prevent the full use and enjoyment of a person's property even though there may be no actual depreciation of the property.\textsuperscript{184} Analogies could be drawn from cases where actions for private nuisance have been maintained against funeral homes, embalming establishments and cemeteries.\textsuperscript{185} If the neighbor can view the activities of the nudist camp from his property he may be in a better position to recover. Relief has been granted where families continually saw the sex activities of animals\textsuperscript{186} and a tomb\textsuperscript{187} on adjacent property. It would not be material that the plaintiff's sense of decency was different from the rest of the community.\textsuperscript{188}

VI. CONCLUSION

A legal conclusion is simple; some jurisdictions permit the practice of organized nudism and others do not. The more difficult conclusion is the moral judgment of whether the law should prohibit nudism. The language used by the courts that have considered the problem indicates the issue to be whether the taboo of nudism is to be sanctioned by the law.

Justice Voelker summarized the arguments for permitting nudism in \textit{People v. Hildabridle}.\textsuperscript{189} Likewise, Justice Merrell, dissenting in \textit{People v. Burke},\textsuperscript{190} covered all the negative arguments. The result of Judge Desmond's decision in \textit{In the Matter of Excelsior Pictures v. Regents of the Univ.},\textsuperscript{191} was that New York's statute to prohibit organized nudism may not have accomplished its goal. Yet, \textit{State ex rel. Church v. Brown}\textsuperscript{192} seems to indicate that the Ohio legislature accomplished its goal. It is also clear that the courts treat the indecent exposure cases and the nudist publication cases in the same context, citing them interchange-

\textsuperscript{183} Interviews With Attorneys Representing Nudist Camps in Miami, Florida, March & April, 1963.
\textsuperscript{184} See \textsc{Harper}, \textsc{Torts} \S 186 (1933).
\textsuperscript{186} \textit{Hayden v. Tucker}, 37 Md. 214 (1866); \textit{Farrell v. Cook}, 16 Neb. 483, 20 N.W. 720 (1884).
\textsuperscript{187} \textit{Barnes v. Hathorn}, 54 Me. 124 (1866). The majority and minority opinions in this case are excellent statements on recovery for mental suffering from private nuisances.
\textsuperscript{189} 353 Mich. 562, 92 N.W.2d 6 (1958).
\textsuperscript{191} 3 N.Y.2d 237, 144 N.E.2d 31 (1957).
\textsuperscript{192} 165 Ohio St. 31, 133 N.E.2d 333, \textit{appeal dismissed}, 352 U.S. 884 (1956).
ably. One conclusion is obvious—it is not the nudists or an occasional sightseer that the law is seeking to protect, but society as an abstract entity. It should be noted that in none of the cases involving organized nudism was there a prosecuting witness. If there has been no victim, who is to be avenged or to call for justice?\

As Justice Voelker emphasizes, one does not have to be a nudist or even believe in nudism to see that the nudist is a persecuted member of our society. Justice Voelker calls that an “indecency.” The states that prohibit nudism are possibly in conflict with the first amendment freedoms, especially if the United States Supreme Court adopts the view that:

The only purpose for which power can rightfully be exercised over any member of a civilized community against his will is to prevent harm to others.\

193. See Hart, Law, Liberty & Morality 83 (1963). It should be noted that this criticism is also applicable to sexual offenses where all participants have consented to the act.

The law, we teach our students in law school, is a jealous mistress. Occasionally, as in the case of nudism, it is a rather meddlesome mistress. Muehler, Legal Regulation of Sexual Conduct 59 (1961).